

FAR FROM HOME

NASA has a plan to bring two astronauts back to Earth after a faulty spacecraft caused a major mission delay.

ENGAGE THE READER

Take a class poll. Ask: Who would be interested in going to space? Have volunteers share their reasons. Explain that space travel is still very unpredictable, and that astronauts have to be prepared for the unexpected. Ask if anyone has heard about the astronauts who have been in space for months longer than anticipated. Let students share what they know before they read the issue.

QUESTIONS FOR CLOSE READING AND DISCUSSION

- Why have Suni Williams and Butch Wilmore had to delay their return?
- What have the astronauts been doing at the ISS? How do you think they're feeling?
- What is NASA's solution to the problem? Do you think it's the right decision? Explain.
- How would you feel in the stranded astronauts' shoes?

EXTEND LEARNING

Ask students if they've changed their opinion about going to space. To give them a better idea about what life aboard the ISS is like, show them the videos that Williams made on a previous trip to the ISS, at ti.me/ISStour. The videos show different areas in the space station, including where astronauts sleep, go to the bathroom, exercise, and work. Return to the question of how students would feel if they were in stuck at the ISS.

Invite students to think more deeply about this by having them create a facsimile of a social-media page that could belong to one of the astronauts. This can be a blog, a Facebook page, an Instagram page, or an X page. There should be at least four posts on the page, including one before takeoff and one after NASA's announcement that the astronauts won't return until February 2025.
